The quarterlife crisis, defined by the authors: "occurs precisely because there is none of that predictable stability that drives middle-aged people to do unpredictable things. After about twenty years in a sheltered school setting many graduates undergo some sort of culture shock. . . . But after graduation, the pathways blur. In that crazy, wild nexus that people like to call the "real world"

The Quarter-Life Crisis - Kansas State University

The quarter-life crisis is the experience many of us go through as we exit college and enter the real world. All of a sudden, there is no one telling us what to do, when to do it and how to do it. Suddenly we are adults and there is a looming feeling that someday someone is going to find out that we don't really belong in the adult world and we have been faking it all along. Maybe that
